50,000 Tracks Of Dolby Noise Reduction

In November 1979, the number of audio tracks throughout the world equipped with Dolby A-type noise reduction passed the 50,000 mark. No other single form of signal processing has ever been so widely accepted by professional sound engineers.

The reason is simple. Every practical method for storing and transmitting sound adds noise to the original signal. The Dolby system diminishes the noise by 10 dB without audible side effects on any kind of program material. This performance is maintained with any type and amount of noise encountered in normal professional applications. Add proven dependability and world-wide compatibility, and that is why each year more and more professionals continue to choose Dolby noise reduction.

The original Dolby noise reduction unit was the two-channel A301, nearly all of which are still in use. Today there is a range of models for every application, from the MH series for multi-track recording to the CP series for cinema sound reproduction. Together they account for the more than 50,000 equipped tracks now fulfilling the Dolby system's original promise: effective noise reduction combined with complete signal integrity.
